It is hard for both of them to keep their hands off each other, and he had never felt so happy for being out of control, for once.But danger lurks in the shadows outside his impenetrable gates, and it attacks sooner than hes expected. But living with humans teaches them that there is more to life than flying. And that being alive isnt just about grace, punishment, and redemption.EXCERPTKiara was at a loss for words but her tear-filled eyes were shining and spoke volumes to him. She managed a nod and a lopsided smile. I really want to kiss you right now, she whispered. I know. Well have some time, I promise. Suddenly, Graemes cell phone rang and he answered it though his eyes never left her face. Yes, Stella, he said into the phone and listened. Wonderful. Ill be right there. Okay, Stella has put together a light dinner for us and Im just going up to get it. Ill be right back. Okay, Kiara replied. Can I just walk you out? Sure, that will be fine, Graeme said as he stared at her quizzically. As soon as they had stepped into the tunnel and Ronan could no longer see them, Kiara launched herself at Graeme, pressing her mouth to his. He gathered her into his arms, pulling her tightly against his body. Their mouths explored each others desperately as their passion rose to a fever pitch in mere seconds. Kiara had her back against the tunnel wall, legs lifted and wrapped around Graemes waist. As she kissed him hungrily, she could feel the evidence of his arousal and ground herself against him. A moan was building in the back of her throat as he responded involuntarily to the motion of her hips.
