Not illustrated. 1802 Excerpt: ...on some parts reddish, and on others green: the eyes are of a beautiful gold-colour, and seem, when the animal is irritated, to flash with a kind of phosphoric light. The odour of this species is very strong; resembling that of the common black or garden nightshade, but much more powerful, so as to fill a whole room. The female is of a browner cast than the male. In winter this species retires under ground, and, like others of the genus, frequents the waters at the breeding season. It appears to vary occasionally in its colours; the ground-colour being sometimes pale carnation. Its voice is said to resemble in some degree the creaking of a door hinge. Laurenti informs us, that the smaller kinds of grey lizard (Lacerta agilis. Var.) on biting this toad, immediately become strongly convulsed, and die in the space of a few minutes; their tails continuing very strongly convulsed for a considerable time after all motion has ceased in the other parts. Its size is smaller than that of the common toad. Dr. Pallas describes it in his Spicilegia Zoologica under the title of Rana variabilis, or the Varying Toad; the general colour being described as whitish, and that of the spots green; but when placed in a hot sunshine becoming entirely grey; when sleeping the spots alone appearing grey; and, lastly, when torpid, the general tinge being a flesh colour. MARINE TOAD. Rana maxima fusco-Flavescens verrucosa, gibbere utrinque hmterali magno poris pertuso. Very large yellowish-brown Toad, with a large porous prominence over each shoulder. liana scapulis gibbosis, clunibus nodosis. Lin. Syst. Nat. p. 356. Rana scapulis singulis scuto punctato, corpore lemniscis convexis rotundis tectis, ano quadrifido. Laurenti Spec. Med. p. 31. This is a very large species; equalling, if...
