

The Curse (Johnnie Marlowe Series Book 5)

In the summer of 1955, Johnnie Marlowe and his cousins visit a Seneca reservation in Pennsylvania where they meet the Indian chief, Don Kinzua, wearing full Seneca garb. He tells them that an ancestral curse was unleashed after the government cancelled an old treaty dating back to George Washington. The government planned to build a dam flooding the tribal land. Don Kinzua tells them that recent animal mutilations in the area were due to the curse, but the boys look for other explanations. The only clues are ghastly the beast eats animal entrails, vomits on the carcass, and leaves behind bone-white scat. Is the beast real? If so, what kind of animal is it? Will it begin to attack humans? The search ends when the boys and Don Kinzua confront the monster and attempt to kill it using ancient Indian methods.
