

Surgical Observations: On Injuries of the Head; And on Miscellaneous Subjects (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Surgical Observations: On Injuries of the Head; And on Miscellaneous Subjects Believing that the observations, which I have had an opportunity of making at St. Bartholomews Hospital, enable me to throw some light on this important and intricate subject, I am induced to submit to the public a short account of several cases that occurred there, and the inferences which I drew from them. The difficulties connected with this part of surgery are sufficiently proved by this circumstance, that, notwithstanding it has at all times excited the attention of surgeons of the greatest talents, and possessing the most extensive field for observation, much difference of opinion still subsists, and the practice that ought to be followed in particular cases yet remains a matter of dispute.
