

The Red Rover (Classic Reprint)

This difficulty was fully felt when this book was originally written, and probably has as much force to-day as it had then, though nearly a quarter of a century has intervened. The history of this country has very little to aid the writer of fiction, whether the scene be laid on the land or on the water. With the exception of the well-known though meagre incidents connected with the career of Kidd, indeed, it would be very difficult to turn to a single nautical occurrence on this part of the continent in the hope of conferring on a work of the imagination any portion of that peculiar charm which is derived from facts clouded a little by time. The annals of America are surprisingly poor in such events; a circumstance that is doubtless owing to the staid character of the people, and especially to that portion of them which is most addicted to navigation. These difficulties were duly appreciated by the writer of this book, who found it necessary to invent his legend with out looking for the smallest aid from traditions or facts. There is no authority whatever for any incident, character, or scene of the book now offered to the reader, unless nature may be thought to furnish originals, in a greater or less degree, to some of the pictures.
